THE COUNTRY EDITOR

He had a special nose for news,
Mixed with his own kind way
Of editing the cold hard facts
To beautify the day.
Perhaps it was optimism
With which he had been blessed
That caused him to write up events
In light that made them best.
He worked long hours, day and night,
To sort the type and print,
As neath his dark-hued visored cap
His gentle eyes would squint.
The joys of his profession
Made all work seem worthwhile,
And the weddings and town progress
Called forth his grandest style.
He loved his small community
And worked with all his heart
To print a weekly paper
That showed he'd done his part.
